

Over twenty years Bernedette Muthien has held senior executive management positions in academia, civil society and the public sector in South Africa and abroad. She is an accomplished facilitator, researcher and poet who designs, implements and evaluates projects for business, donors, government and NGOs.

Until August 2016, she was the Deputy Director General: Social Transformation and Economic Empowerment in the Presidency, where she served in the high level Economic (ESEID) Cluster.

Over 24 years, on all six continents, she produced more than 200 publications and conference presentations, some of which have been translated from English into at least 16 other languages.

Muthien was the first Fulbright-Amy Biehl fellow at Stanford University, and holds postgraduate degrees in Political Science from the Universities of Cape Town and Stellenbosch.

Muthien serves on various international advisory boards, including the international journal Human Security Studies, as well as the International Institute on Peace Education.
